A Code of Health is Most Necessary for Them

HOW, WHEN AND WHAT TO EAT

Marning Exercise-Follow the English Style-Some Well Known Men About New York.

The man of fashion should have his ele of health as he has his code of thics. From October I, when society takes up its town life, until the Lenten days of rost, the strain on his brain. nerve and muscle is constant, and the vitality of the strongest man in the world would be undermined in at least two seasons unless a rigorous system for the preservation of health, coupled with a good deal of self-abacquation, is followed. The duties of a man of fashon involve his presence at innumerable "affairs" each season. The opera and so assembly, the theater and the ball, entail a necessary complement of conman. Of course, a fashiousbie man frinks his rich and rare wines, for his ife would be unbearably stupld if he schewed these boverages. But he owes as far as possible. The one rule to fol-lew at any "little affair" is to drink eringly of all that is set before him. good esterer will see that the guests at the banquet are served with only such wines as suit each particular course, and moderate amounts of each rintage can only serve to aid digestion. But here is a raio with regard to drinking that every man of fashion aboutd bear in mind. Avoid the matutinal ockteil. Of course, it seems just the right thing when you get up in the right thing when you get up in the morning to look into the mirror and find unmistakenble evidences that you had a great time the night before. Your thoughts naturally advert to bromides and antypyrine. Your physician, if he is a good one, will tell you to avoid all these temperature availants. these temporary expedients. Alls advice will run something like this: "Swing your Indian clubs for ten minutes, or exercise with your dumb bells fur the name length of time, and then jump into a bath as cold as you can stand it. If you have a shower bath handy take it in as ley a shape as possible, and then rub yourself down with a grash towel until you can fairly feel the blood purling into every part of your new reviving constitution."

In his skeeping spartmants the man of Inshkon must be a fresh-air crank. He need not have at his tongue's end the number of outdo pards of air that one adult human being will person in one hour, but he must know the value of breathing fresh pure sir, or air as meanly pure as the polluting city will permit, while he sheeps, and to do this, too, without expense to grip-broading

In the first place, in selecting your room, try and select one into which the light of day will not pierce at too early hour. The man of fashion must esp at least eight hours and in that ime the restorative powers of the body

There should be absolute quiet and for this reason it is advisable that the society man get as far away as possible from the early din of New York's granite-paved streets. It will be a difficult matter to secure proper ventilation for an inside room, and that is why, in the selection of an epartment, the ventilating system of the whole house should be looked rate. If it is compatible with the requisite of perfect quiet, the man of fashion should make it a rate to have the windows of his apartment open in cold as well as in warm weather. It is not ossuary to aleep in a cold atmosphere. but it is necessary to sleep in one that is pure, and for this reason you may turn on your heater and get your room as warm as you like it, but heep the window open.

There is one thing above all others that keeps the English man of fashion in such fine health. There has been no specimen of ruddler manhood on American soil in years than was brought to notice in the person of Col. Vivian. whose marriage to Mrs. Roberts ocan example of the physically-trained military gentleman and English man of faction, and he himself says that his powerful physique and strong constitujou are but the result of the physical training that he has bad since child-This is teld to emphasize the seed of exercise on the part of every

After grad untion, although they no longer keep up their football and baseball games, they nevertheless continue exercising to some extent, whether it be in highcling, tennis or riding. Many go in for gymnactics, as the membership rell of the Manhattan sthictic club shows. Or C. P. Linhart, the physical director of that incillation, has in his charge a number of sons of millionaires and pinent oleh men who take regular be Linkart has adopted the obart aye-tem of development first introduced by Amberet and which has since been adopted by Harvard and Vale. The kies of this charting system is to keep progressive record of a man's development so that at any given time it may be secretained just which muscles need special training to keep up the symmetry of the body. For instance, if the measurements show that he is "pigeon-breasted" or proportionately to deep through the class, he is put on exercise that developes him laterally, and rise that developer him laterally, and then

HOW THE MEN LIVE versa. But in general it cannot be said that gymnastics are popular in the renks of men of fashion. Boxing is not much of a fad now, though several wealthy young men are still waited on in their apartments by champions from whom they take instruction in the use of their fists. But boxing is too violent. A man who needs his head in his business, even if that business is only saying charming nothings about Ibsen and Browning between waltens, can't afford to have it undergo the concussions of a spaining bout.

Riding is deservedly popular in fashionable circles. It is an exhilarating exercise, and, although it does not detakes aret place as a supplementary clubman and president of the Wagner Palace Car Company, uses the dumb bells and Indian clubs. Chauncey M. Depew takes his out in walking. De Lancey Nicoll, the district attorney, is also a great walker, and about once a week, when the weather is propitious, takes a twenty-mile constitutional out into the country. Tom Johnson, the great society favorite and statesman of Cleveland, is devoted to the bicycle. Eddie Gould has strong predilection in the direction of athletic sports in addition to his skill on horseback, which makes it improbable that he will ever have to employ a private physician, as does his father.

Seward Webb, the well-known
